THURBER DIALS

Beginning of New Method Brings Together Many Telephone Officials.

Machine switching telephone apparatus, the first of its type in New York city, was placed in operation in the Pennsylvania central office, Manhattan, by the New York Telephone Company at midnight last night. Approximately 1,700 telephone lines serving subscribers in the Pennsylvania district, in which are the hotels Pennsylvania, McAlpin, Martinique and Waldorf-Astoria, were transferred from the manual switchboard to the new mechanical equip-

The first call to be dialed through the new system was made by H. F. Thurber, president of the New York Telephone Company. This call was followed immediately by a number of test calls on lines which are frequently used in sending emergency calls, such as for the Fire or Police Department.

The opening of the new office brought together here telephone officials and engineers from various parts of the country, as it represents a new departure in mechanical telephone operation in a system so large as that which serves! New York, It was necessary not only to install the Pennsylvania apparatus and make sure that it was ready to function smoothly but also to coordinate it with the more than 100 other central offices of a different type in the city's telephone system, so that the two would work together perfectly. Part of this coordination task involved the installation of special apparatus in fifty central offices.

Watches Were Timed to Task.

The program for the transfer had been laid out with infinite care. Even the watches of the men in charge were synchronized before the final steps were the watches of the men in charge were synchronized before the final steps were taken to make the cut over complete. Not only was the apparatus previously subjected to tests covering every conceivable type of service requirement but also every person who in any way had a part in the transfer had been carefully trained in advance. This training was given to more than one hundred operators who will handle toll, long distance and special calls. Until the cut over took place all that kept the new dial instruments from being operated under the machine switching method were tiny brass wedges placed in the relays controlling the central office apparatus, which prevented the electrical current from flowing into what is technically known as the "line switches," which perform the initial step in establishing a connection mechanically. Duplicate wire connections were made in the lines to be transferred from their terminals on the manual switchboard to their new terminals on the mechanical apparatus. Removing these wedges and pulling the heat coils of fuses on the main distributing frame of the old switchboard were the principal elements in the cut over. As there were a great number of these tiny wedges to be pulled out cords were attached to each wedge converging into a master cord so that large numbers of wedges were pulled out simultaneously.

How the Change Was Made.

At 11:50 came the order to "stand by."
The forces engaged in the task took their designated places. A brief final inspection was made. At 11:55 the signal to "cut" was given. The heat coils or fuses in the manual apparatus were pulled out, thus cutting off the lines from the manual equipment. The wedges were then withdrawn and electrical life passed from the old board into the new equipment.

Among the telephone men who witnessed the transfer were groups from the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company, the Bell Telephone Comapny of Pennsylvania, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, the Western Electric Company and the New York Telephone Company,
